A talk by Professor Dave Goulson.
Based on his new book: Silent Earth, averting the insect apocalypse*

Guildford Beekeepers are delighted to invite you to a special evening event on the 1st of December, 7-10 pm. at the new RHS Wisley Hilltop Science Centre with Professor Dave Goulson. He will be drawing on the latest research and presenting a lecture about the current environmental issues facing our bees and insect populations. He will discuss what is needed to support them and the environment they live in.

Dave Goulson is Professor of Biology at Sussex University and has published more than 300 articles on ecology and the conservation of bees, butterflies and other insects.
He founded the Bumblebee Conservation Trust in 2006 and is the recipient of multiple conservation awards. Dave is also the author of eight books bringing the subject of ecology to the wider community, these include the bestsellers, A Sting in the Tale and The Garden Jungle.

A signed copy of his new book; Silent Earth, averting the insect apocalypse* will be available to purchase through the ticketing process and can be collected on the night.

This is an extended invitation to all Beekeeping Associations, Conservation Organisations and individuals that are concerned about pollinators, the ecology and the environment.

The evening is from 7pm – 10 pm and will begin with complementary mulled wine and mince pies on arrival, then a Lecture by Professor Goulson, followed by questions and answers.

This is an opportunity not to be missed, we are extremely fortunate to engage such an inspirational speaker. To avoid disappointment, it is recommended to book as soon as possible, as places are limited.

We hope to see you there, it will be an interesting and inspiring evening.
